Rehabilitation of Brachial Plexus Injuries in Children

A message from Occupational Therapist Yvette Elias, OT/L, ATRI-C, CHT, Nicklaus Children's Hospital

Parents of children with brachial plexus injuries often feel overwhelmed by the complexity of information they receive. Finding a qualified team of health professionals experienced in diagnosing and treating their child's condition can guide parents in making timely, informed decisions regarding surgical and nonsurgical treatments.

Early therapeutic intervention offers the best potential for restoring function of a child's upper extremity. The Lorna Ramos Course is designed to provide information and hands-on training on current best practices for rehabilitation of brachial plexus injuries in pediatric patients from newborn to adolescent.

Aquatic Therapy

Immerse yourself (or watch others)

Among the highlights of the Lorna Ramos Course is a hands-on pool therapy lab for participants to apply skills learned in a formal lecture by Clinical Specialist Lori Belfiore Ragni, MS, OTR/L. The pool is an ideal environment for therapy because of the unique properties of water, which allow a child to move more easily and achieve his or her goals.
